Is your company ready for the next wave of wage and hour litigation?

Wage and hour class actions have cost California employers more than a billion dollars in recent years. As the filing of class action litigation continues unabated, the minefield that is California wage and hour law is becoming increasingly treacherous. What started as cases primarily involving claims of misclassification of managerial employees has evolved into litigation concerning almost every provision of the Labor Code and the Wage Orders, and involving many common employment policies and practices. Are you prepared? This breakfast briefing will help companies navigate these dangerous waters by exploring important judicial and regulatory developments in wage and hour law, and highlighting the new trends in class action litigation.

Among the topics that will be discussed are:

- Meal and Rest Breaks
- Reimbursement of Employee Expenses
- Unlawful Bonus Plans
- Improper Chargebacks Against Commissions
- Travel vs. Commute Time
- "Off-the-Clock" Claims
- Alternative Workforce Arrangements – Independent Contractors; Leased and Joint Employees
